Human Rights

LL.M. (MASTER OF LAWS)

"Despite many achievements in the field of human rights protection since the establishment of the United Nations in 1945, the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in 1948 and the codification of human rights which gained particular momentum in 1966 with the UN Covenant on Civil and Political Rights and the UN Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights as well as the development of regional human rights mechanisms, many challenges persist. Global trends such as climate change, digitalisation, demographic changes, mass migration as well as growing distrust of state and international institutions, enhanced polarisation and confrontation combined with continued attacks on the universality of human rights, demonstrate the indispensable need for a strong dedication for human rights combined with a holistic and deep understanding of human rights and related questions as a solid foundation for human rights work and activism. The Human Rights Master is intended to equip participants with such in-depth theoretical knowledge and, at the same time, provide them with practical insights and skills necessary for future-oriented and interdisciplinary discourses and results in order to make human rights a reality for all!"

Content and Facts

The one-year (60 ECTS Credits) postgraduate program "Human Rights" of the University of Vienna has a clear jurisprudential profile. It is, however, not confined to teaching abstract legal theories but will also convey practical skills that are necessary for working in the field of human rights.

Based on the academic excellence of the University of Vienna and on the expertise of the Ludwig Boltzmann Institute of Fundamental and Human Rights for conducting applied research, this postgraduate program can best be described with the words: "Where Science meets Practice!"

The master program addresses the multi-layered field of human rights and reflects different relevant legal frameworks, as well as the corresponding protection mechanisms. Topics covered by the program will be, i. a., legal human rights know-how including theoretical foundations of international human rights protection, methodology, as well as necessary competences for people working in a human rights-related environment. Depending on the educational background of participants there are two alternative compulsory modules: For non-lawyers an introduction to legal studies will be offered. To elaborate on the combination of theoretical knowledge with practical skills, lawyers have to participate in a trial simulation ("Moot Court").

Qualification Profile

Participants of this master program will acquire in-depth theoretical knowledge and practical skills in the field of fundamental and human rights. They will be able to assess current challenges to human rights protection and to develop strategies within the human rights protection framework. Graduates will be able to make use of their skills and knowledge in a broad variety of contexts, ranging from private business to public service, as well as academia.

Target Group

The postgraduate program is aimed at graduates who wish to specialize in human rights, in particular law graduates, but also graduates from other disciplines. The program is open for those who recently graduated, but shall also enable employed persons, for example in public administration, academia, the education sector, NGOs and civil society, as well as the private sector (e.g. corporate lawyers, attorneys, legal trainees, consultants) to participate. Completing the Human Rights Master will ensure that participants can adequately address and integrate human rights into their future work.
